

State Press — March 27, 2026

ASU's budget proposal encapsulates academic fee proposals not previously approved by the board, new program and college fees, changes to existing fees and increases to tuition and fees greater than the maximum tuition range set by the board, according to the committee book for the meeting.

The proposal is for 25 new graduate program fees and two increases to graduate program fees. Also included is a new annual undergraduate and graduate provost advanced technology fee of $200, which, according to the committee book for the meeting, is "to provide students access to artificial intelligence tools and platforms and other technologies."